Once again, Prashanth came to the rescue when the Engineering team struggled for over a month with the Build Runners in Ralleigh DC. Once we concluded that we couldn't continue to use the RDC servers, he came up with a quick, scalable and cost-effective solution, by bringing multifold improvement to the build time by leveraging spot instances in AWS.

If there is one thing that I can steal from you it would be the way you think when presented with a problem. The approach you take in breaking down the problem and analyse it from multiple angles is amazing. Your thoughts and questions in discussions always bring out new possibilities and help us in thinking deeper. Keep inspiring and keep rocking :)

Prashanth has proven again and kept setting very high standards when it comes ownership and ability to understand the tech depth not just in the core product code base but also equally in the infrastructure. He slogged for continuous hours to bring back the cluster which was heavily impacted due to public IP removal on Saturday and immediately after got into resolving blockers for the Spectraforce release on Sunday. This kind of dedication and ownership along with his tech ability makes him standout and shine.. thanks a lot for your valuable contribution!!

Guys we have Arya 3.0 pushing error logs on our communication channel i.e. MS Team. If you have not seen please check it out on "Production Alerts" channel. Prashanth built the connector over the weekend to the MS Team which publishes the run time error summary and dashboard to view the further details. With this, Engineers can keep analyzing the issue occurring in real time on the platform. These are the initiatives which will transition us towards becoming a champion engineering team. A smart initiative, I would say!!

We hit upon a critical show stopper when google stopped supporting their tiny url service. Prashanth proactively jumped and evaluated multiple providers. And finally we built our own URL shortner in less than 6 hours which is highly cost effective as compared to any external paid service and now it is live in production. Special thanks to Ajai for his extended support on this. You guys keep the spirit alive!
